Flipping Out

Students Take Breaks with their Favorite Magazines

At any time of the day, you can find people reading in the library. Novels, non-fiction, magazines—anything they can get their hands on. Literally. Often we find ourselves with brief pockets of time, just perfect for reading a quick story in a magazine. It can be for entertainment or edification, but reading magazines allows students to really broaden their horizons.

Seventh grader Leah Davis had an interesting take on reading the Spanish edition of People Magazine. “It helps me advance my vocabulary and exposes me to different culture,” Davis said.

You could even use magazines to get your house maga-clean! “Some of those house care magazines help me manage my chores and household work,” said seventh grader Matt Dalglish.

Alex Bawa and Thana McLain liked catching up on sport stats, their favorite teams, and all things athletic from Sports Illustrated.

While Jackie Meisel on the other hand, found herself reading US Weekly for the juicy gossip. “[I really like it] because it has cool ‘Who wore it best?’ pictures,” she stated.

Sure. They aren't books. But magazines can still give us information and culture. So why not catch a little low-key reading time?

Hands On Learning

1. Catching up on the latest celebrity gossip, Elizabeth Armstrong (7) scans some of her favorite entertainment magazines. 2. Reading up on some local news and events, seventh grader Anna Thomas leaves through Austin magazine. 3. Seventh grader Christopher Carter checks out the latest sports news headlines in the January issue of Sports Illustrated. 4. Getting the scoop, Danielle Atwood (7) enjoys some downtime in the library.
