screaming all the way to state

The Scream Team was a huge hit at Albany High this year. As football season was in full swing a group of students decided themselves out in various costumes that related to a theme each week and called themselves the "Scream Team". Attending every game, the Scream Team stood along the sidelines just to cheer on their Lions.

"I loved being involved with the Scream Team. Everyone that participated bonded so well," said sophomore Kylea Gardner. "I also loved dressing up as a super hero when we lost Soargraves to advance to state. The game was super intense and the crowd was involved, so it made for a great experience."

The creation of this student section allowed students to be involved in something bigger than just sitting in the stands. "Participating in Scream Team made games more fun and many students got involved in cheering for the Lions," said sophomore Rachel Hill.

Since many students were engaged, the Scream Team continued dressing up for basketball games.

"I enjoyed dressing up like an old person when the Lions played Wintons in basketball. The wrinkled mask I wore looked realistic and it threw people off; it even scared them," said senior Teagan Brandon. "The Scream Team gave me a way to express my wild side."

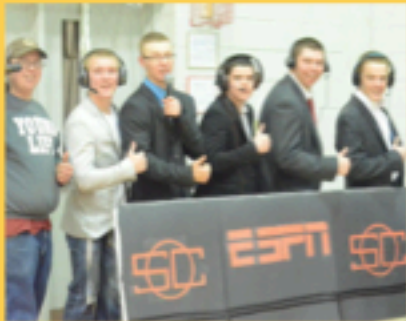

As the Scream Team grew in size, it also grew in Lion pride. This group allowed students to be a part of the sport without actually being on the field or court. The Scream Team will continue to thrive at Albany High.

With a black eye and orange jumpsuit, Rachel Hill imitates the other school as the Lion's "stuffed and cuffed" the Ranger Bulldogs.

Dressed as Lumberjacks, Michaela Hearnes, Hyle Scott, and Kylea Conde cheer on the Lion's in their first playoff game against Miles.

Blayne Canble, Caleb Masters, Teagan Brandon, Steve Phillips, Colin Head, and Levi Britting set up their ESPN radio booth at the district basketball game versus Haskell.

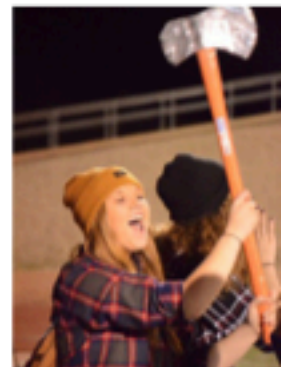

By getting in a throwback basketball uniform, Caleb Masters watches in anticipation as the Lion's took on Stamford.

Loft Davis rings a cow bell to make some noise for the Lions. Davis, along with other members of the Scream Team, spray painted shirts spelling out "Albany Lions" as well as painting their face with red and white stripes for the state game.

Molly Lee dresses as an old lady to support the basketball teams as they play Hawley.

As the Lions score a touchdown, Abbigail Beard celebrates by throwing an axe in the air.

Carley Price participates in the juke/rop theme by sporting a tattoo sleeve. Dressing up was a fun way to show school spirit and support," Price said.
