At 6:30 a.m. a single light shines from Centennial Hall's second floor. Another junior, another David Brown writing conference.

As we rush to class at 7:59, more than 800 pairs of Sperry's and New Balances have trod the path from the parking lot to SLH, Hoffman and the Fine Arts wing.

Huck Finn is dissected in eighth grade humanities; multiplication tables are mastered in second grade classes.

Habit drives us to grab that box lunch on the way to physics lab as the sounds of fifth graders tossing the football fill the Quad.

But eight hours in, the day is just getting started.

Day in, we do the time.

ROUTINE Lower schoolers let off steam before the long day of classes as they chase senior Taylor Rohrich at morning recess.

COFFEEHOUSE PERFORMANCE

Eighteen, 20 hour days — it's the rule, not the exception. After six rigorous classes spread out over eight periods, the day begins again in full.

Wednesday it's Student Council meetings. Thursday, Austin Street dinners. Stuffing laundry bags for alums, finishing soccer practice at 6 p.m., then darting home to wolf down dinner before three hours of geometry proofs, Latin translations, cello practices.

There's an energy that keeps us going. Hell Week to survive and all-nighters for robotics. Sleep is precious, rare — we accept that.

Day out, time is a luxury.

He's a contradiction. Dr. John Perryman is the campus disciplinarian, and every student understands what it means to end up on

"Perryman's List."

And yet, he has one of the warmest personalities and friendliest smiles on campus. As head of the Leadership and Ethics Council, he's open and approachable, and students with ideas know to start with him.

A great admirer of Theodore Roosevelt, he regularly challenges students to "Dare greatly," a line that comes from a long quote from Teddy. It speaks of men who know "great enthusiasms and great devotions, who spends himself in a worthy cause."

It describes the men Dr. Perryman works so hard to help us to become.

More so, it perfectly describes him.

ENJOYMENT With his signature Texas Rangers ballcap and vest, Dr. John Perryman joins seniors for a barbecue lunch at Pecan Lodge as the Christmas break begins.

Nose to the grindstone

Two hundred eighty nine. Fourteen. Eighty-eight percent. Ninety-seven. Numbers, sure, but they tell a story. If "significant participation of extra-curricular activities in a club or organization is, indeed, one of the best predictors of life's success (study, National Association of Secondary School Principals) success is looming for the 323 Upper School athletes in the school's 15 varsity sports and the 803 students who participate in one of the 96 clubs or groups active in 2016. Group dynamics, working together to meet goals, developing trust in others, toughness and focus — all gained from being a part of something greater than yourself.

UNDER CLASSES MEN

It takes a village

Peers. Classmates. Brothers. Any of these words could describe the seven hundred seventy-six underclassmen that span eleven grades, but we go by so much more. Poets in the morning, athletes in the afternoon, choristers in the evening — we're all unique. Despite the many titles or labels we wear, we all go by the same name — Marksmen. We see the name as a lifestyle, a goal to be reached through diligence, hard work, perseverance. From the Lower School halls to the college counseling office, Marksmen can be seen any time of day, and while we may have different interests, we are all a part of the same community.

SENIOR YEAR

Rolling up your sleeves

This is it. Whether it's been 12 years coming or only one, we all know that nothing worthwhile is free, and we're no strangers to the hard work it takes to become top-dogs. Eighty-eight seniors, surviving Pecos, McDonald's Week, college apps. But we're only getting started. The experiences we've shared have shaped us and given us the tools to go boldly on to that next stage whether it's Yale, Georgetown, A&M or destinations unknown. We've bonded, grown, built and shaped the campus — the same thing we'd been doing for years before. Except this is it — that final year, forging even stronger bonds with classmates in this, that final year, here at 10600 Preston Road.

We've learned to love work as much as we love our brothers: studying for seventh grade vocab in the Green Library, meeting after school at Chicken Express for AP chemistry, celebrating a Lions' win over ESD in Hicks Gym. To us, being a Marksman is more than just a name. It's a way of life, a passion, an insatiable hunger. It's a calling we cannot ignore.
