After a summer full of joy and memories, we walked through the doors on our first day of school, carrying new goals and ideas --- ready to carry them out as the year progressed. But the question that slipped everyone's mind was, Who's Watching? Whether it was a teacher, classmate, principal or parent, we were always being watched. It was as though our life was a production, and we were the producers. We were all producing our unique stories with the impact we made on the community. Not only did this influence what we said and did, but it made us want to inspire those around us. So as we start our next big adventure, we must do everything with excellence and give it our all because we never know Who's Watching.

"Integrity is doing the right thing, even when no one is watching." -C.S. Lewis

FRIDAY MIGHT LIGHTS

As Seniors James Herzberger, Ryan Neville, and Garrett Yarbrough sprint on to the football field, a blend of exhilaration and zeal escalate throughout the football team and supporters in the stands. In the award-winning TV series, Friday NIght Lights, the high school football team of Dillon, Texas unites their community together. The team's Coach Eric Taylor faces numerous obstacles: juggling his responsibilites as a father, coach, husband, and member of his community. Although he deals with immense pressure, he is notable for his wise words, "Right here, right now, God has placed you to go do what you do best. Go all the way." Just like the members in this popular TV series, our athletic teams never ceased to motivate and encourage one another through the countless challenges. We put our trust in Him and lived in fellowship because God has placed us to go do what we do best. We go all the way.

The Panther Club

The Breakfast Club is known as the quintessential film of the 1980s. This 1985 film nerd, a privileged popular girl, an introvert with follows five teenagers, each a member of a different high school clique, who spend Saturday detention together and come to realize that they are all more than their respective stereotypes. The characters include an athlete, a grade-obsessed psychological problems, and a tough kid. These initial impressions, however, are diminished as they share parts of their lives to each other and begin to listen. In the end, Brian writes an essay on "who you think you are," describing how each one of them is, all together, a brain, an athlete, a basket case, a princess, and a criminal. This iconic film serves as the epitome of Hyde Park. We are more than just a stereotype. We bring together a sundry of talents, personalities, and backgrounds to create our family, The Panther Club. Just like in any production or part of life, there will always be the quirky or embarrassing outtakes that turn into priceless memories. They are the moments an audience anticpates after watching a favorite show or movie. We find it is oddly enticing to watch our favorite actor mess up his lines and break character. We are fascinated with the bloopers because we feel like we've learned something about the actor's personality, away from the celebrity aura. We have an unspoken, but apparent, connection with one another from moments of silly slip-ups. This school year had no shortage of hilarious outtakes. We embodied everything linked to the definition of quirky and that is what made us different from other schools. At the first pep rally, Jax Tate entertains the football team and Prancers as he encourages them to vote for him in the costume contest. Are You Walching

After a school year full of memories (some good, some bad), we walk out the doors on our last day of school, carrying achieved goals and new ideas --- ready to build on them through the coming years.
