Texting Guide

for 2016

Use Emojis

These help convey a certain feeling. Apple even added a controversial middle finger emoji. Why have actual feelings when we can just use emojis? "Sometimes that's how I communicate. When I'm stressed out, I always use the emoji with the one tear like, 'Oh, I'm really stressed!'"

Hannah Garcia, 11

AutoCorrect

Auto correct fixed little mistakes, but sometimes it completely changed words and you didn't realize it until you hit send. It's happened to all of us. Proof read your texts to prevent an awkward misunderstanding. "I always mean to type one word but then it changes it. Like once I typed good and it changed to hoon."

Elizabeth Carr, 11

Don't ,;:

Punctuation was important, but when it comes to quickly texting your friends, there was no reason to be so formal. Let's be honest, the only useful punctuation marks were ??? and !!! "It depends on the person. For first impressions or my parents I use punctuation, but for my friends I just don't care."

Zachary Horn, 11

Reply

You got a text message. You read it. And then closed the messaging app. Reading a message and not responding was the ultimate way to get on someone's nerves. You don't want to be that guy. "I just don't talk to them anymore because it's mean to ignore people, so I ignore them too."

Devyn Hinds, 11

Prioritize

Prioritize texting people back. It's not only noticeable when you receive a text and you get on twitter instead of responding, but it's also rude. "It annoys me because I know they're on there, and I can see them tweeting and instagramming, but they're ignoring me."

Sara Geroges, 11

Don't "K"

One of the worst things a texter can do while texting is reply with just a "K." Maybe you're being lazy and don't want to spend time typing more, but you're forcing the other person to keep the conversation going. "I think it's annoying because people aren't putting effort into their texting."

Jessica Davault, 11

casing our phone

Cases were more than just a piece of plastic protecting a phone, they were a way to express personality

"I think my phone case is cool because it's interesting and has a lot of different colors. I also really like flowers."
Daniella Moreno, 11

"I like my case because I like the texture of it and the brand Michael Kors. I've dropped it a lot, but it's been really protective."
Madison Tyler, 11

"My phone case is important to me because I like everything about it. I love stripes and I also really like the brand."
