My Mane Girl

Needham competes in riding

Junior Josie Needham is a competitive horseback rider, giving her the opportunity to participate in off-campus P.E.

Needham started riding when she was six years old and riding competitively at 11 years old.

"I love riding because I feel connected to my horse, but I also love how it's a way to de-stress," Needham said. "My favorite part is the bond I have with my horse and the trust between our two species."

Needham spends about six hours a week riding, but on average, a total of 25 hours per week at the barn taking care of her off-the-track racehorse, Little Rita.

"Ninety percent of horseback riding is the care we give to our horses," Needham said. "It is like having a child that weighs 2,000 pounds."

Horses need a lot of care and attention. Needham said she needs to put Little Rita before herself in order to have a healthy relationship with her.

When she goes to college, Needham will not be able to continue competitive riding, but plans to ride Little Rita whenever she returns to Texas on breaks.
